

Université de Corse Pascal Paoli - Corte

● Institution's profile

First established in 1765 and reopened in 1981, the Université de Corse Pascal Paoli is a comprehensive university offering more than 90 national diplomas in three teaching and research faculties, a university institute of technology (IUT), a school of business administration (IAE), and four university vocational institutes (IUPs).

The Université de Corse is at the center of the island of Corsica in the Mediterranean Sea. A faculty of 150 serves 4,000 students, of whom 9% are international students from 35 countries.

The Université de Corse offers educational programs in letters, languages, arts, and humanities; law, economics, and management; science and technology; and physical education and sports. Among the many academic concentrations available to students are communications, design and planning of cultural projects, tourism, environment, physics, chemistry, biology, and computer science.

The university's Institute of the Environment groups together four advanced research centers and 19 research teams, some of which are affiliated with the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS). The university endeavors to be a center of excellence in the environmental field, concentrating on the Mediterranean environment and identity and information and communication technologies.

Students are provided with the learning resources they need for academic success—including libraries, computer facilities, language labs with new computers and communication technologies, a high-quality cultural program, and a strong sports program.

French courses are offered throughout the academic year for foreign students. Strong emphasis is placed on housing, dining, and student social life.

Thanks to its exceptional geographic location in the heart of the Mediterranean, the Université de Corse enjoys relations with its Italian, Spanish, and North African neighbors. Numerous bilateral accords, educational and research networks, and student/teacher exchanges are already in place; even more are planned.
