

● Institution's profile

Created in 1970, the Université Henri Poincaré (UHP) is a comprehensive university of science, technology, and health that offers more than 200 national diploma programs in information and communication technologies, materials, geosciences, biology, environmental studies, technology, engineering, and health (medicine, pharmacy, dentistry, paramedical specialities).

Located in the city of Nancy in the Lorraine region of France, the university has a faculty and staff of 2,500 and an enrollment of 18,000 students, some 10 percent of whom come from 98 different countries outside France.

In addition to 5 teaching faculties (sciences, medicine, pharmacy, dentistry, and athletics), 3 university institutes of technology (IUTs), and 3 engineering schools, the Université Henri Poincaré also has 43 nationally recognized research laboratories, most affiliated with national research organizations such as CNRS, INSERM, INRA, and INRIA. The university's active research program creates an environment conducive to top quality teaching and learning.

On-campus student services help UHP students focus on their studies and on their future careers. Those services include 3 university libraries and specialized documentation centers, multimedia centers and language labs, a student life office, intramural sports, study and research skills centers, and a student advising office.

In collaboration with university bodies, Université Henri Poincaré Nancy 1 also offers the best possible welcome for foreign students in terms of housing and food services.

Because of its location, UHP has developed Transnational training programs with institutions in Germany, Belgium, and Luxembourg, including several joint degree programs. It is an active participant in European student and faculty exchange programs (Campus Europae, Erasmus, Socrates Leonardo, Franco-German university).

In addition to its involvement in the European higher education area, the university has developed its international relations, notably with Asia, Africa, the Middle East and the American continent. The university is party to some 100 cooperative agreements with institutions in 40 countries.
