Research

With more than 1,700 graduate students and more than 800 research professors and researchers, the Université Paris 13 constitutes a major centre for academic research in the north of the greater Paris region. Covering practically all disciplinary fields, it combines fundamental research and development in order to create recognised 2 doctoral schools and 33 laboratories, including 14 labelled by CNRS (national scientific research Center) by the INSERM (national Institute of health and medical research).

Strengths

The reception, guidance, integration and academic success of the students are the primary objectives of the Université Paris 13.

To these ends, many services and resources are placed at their disposal on the 4 campuses:

- 3 libraries
- Information and Documentation Centre (CIDO)
- Cultural and artistic activities
- Varied sports activities
- Practical assistance with housing, work placements, employment search
- Language Centre for further training in languages, through self-directed training or in small-group tutorials

The four campuses of the Université Paris 13 are located north and northeast of Paris and are served by public transportation.
